Minor opposing air pressure systems will produce calm, friendly and moderately mild autumn weather up to and including Friday. Foehny weather conditions will approach again on Friday. Earlier, the wind will be weak and longer sunny spells are repeatedly expected. Towards the weekend, we will be drawn into a low pressure influence, whereby with weak southern accumulation a stronger foehn wind is expected on the main Alpine ridge and north thereof. Towards Sunday, the foehn wind will soon abate and a decrease in temperature is expected with lasting effect. However, significant precipitation is still not expected.
