The stormy weather will end on Friday, however, a long-term weather improvement is not expected. The warm front, expected on Thursday, will soon be followed by a cold front on Friday. The snow line will sink to the low areas in the valleys. Friday afternoon promises significantly calmer conditions. However, heavy clouds will dominate the weather at the weekend and the amounts of snowfall will increase. The temperatures will remain wintry low. A lively north-westerly wind and a new active warm front will interfere with the weather on Sunday night and on Monday. Precipitation will increase, the snow line will rise distinctly above 1500m.
