The strong offshoot of an Azores high, resulting in the current bright summer weather, will be replaced by more humid, unstable Atlantic air on Friday. However, this does not mean, that Friday will bring bad weather. On the contrary, the current weather models predict, that the unsettled conditions will delay, consequently Friday promises mostly sunny and warm weather. Larger growing cumulus clouds expected during the day will result in a low risk for showers and thunderstorms towards evening. Nevertheless, infiltrating humid and unstable air will determine the weather beyond the weekend. Really bad weather is not expected, however, changeable, partly unsettled summer weather is forecast. A higher risk for showers and thunderstorms is also forecast for Sunday. This weather trend will continue throughout next week. The summer weather will generally continue, however, a low risk for showers and thunderstorms is forecast too.
