A high-pressure area and an inflow of warm air will still determine the weather until into Friday. On Friday afternoon, larger growing cumuli clouds will increasingly mix with the sunshine. First, partly thundery showers may occur towards evening. As a föhny wind may blow in the higher altitudes, the conditions may remain dry in some places. A massive cold front will reach our regions on Friday night. Heavy rain showers will probably continue into Saturday morning. Saturday afternoon promises more settled conditions. A high-pressure area will settle in on Sunday, however, cooler Atlantic air masses will still determine the temperature level.
